3rd Annual Magic Week New Haven

For Magic Week New Haven third time is definitely the charm! This annual event is back for its third year thanks to conjurers, illusionists and even a sorcerer or two. Magic Week New Haven brings free magic shows to the Elm City at the spookiest time of year. Local magicians have teamed up with the New Haven Free Public Library and other venues to provide free magic shows throughout the last eight days of October.

The magicians are offering a range of family-oriented shows at the various New Haven library branches, parks and other locations starting Saturday, October 24th. Magic Dan, Snowball the Rabbit and visiting magician Zach Ivins will start things off at the main branch of the New Haven Free Public Library at 133 Elm Street on the 24th at 2:00 pm. A schedule for this and the other shows is provided below.

As always, magicians have ulterior motives for their words and actions, and magic week is no exception. Magic Week not only promotes magic but also marks the anniversary of the death of Harry Houdini. Houdini, commonly regarded as the world's most famous magician and greatest escape artist, passed away on Halloween 1926. There is no better way to honor Houdini than by sharing the magic which he so loved.

The magicians orchestrating New Haven's magic week are members of the local "ring" of the International Brotherhood of Magicians (www.ring59.com). Magic Week New Haven is a chance for ring members to perform the miracles they have been practicing and honing for months and years. IBM members meet monthly to share the magic, learn new effects and keep in touch with the magical world.
